

Roque Calvo Elected President of CESSE

Roque Calvo, the Executive Director of ECS, has been elected president of CESSE, for 2000-2001. Calvo took office at the CESSE annual meeting in New York this past July. He has served the organization in various capacities: on the board of directors (1995-98), as secretary (1998-99), and as vice-president (1999-2000). He also served on the Task Force on Member Satisfaction (1991-94), was chairman of the Membership Credentials Committee (1996-98), and was chairman of the CESSE 2000 Program Committee.

The membership of CESSE includes over 150 scientific and engineering societies, who have organized for the purpose of providing a forum for the mutual exchange of experience and solutions for common problems in operating a professional society. CESSE conducts seminars and workshops on trends and changing conditions, publishes a newsletter, supports an active research program on issues associated with professional society management, and has a voice when significant issues face the technical-professional community in the national-legislative arena.

This year CESSE will be celebrating its 50th anniversary. ■
